Zoning relief might boost preservation

By Pamela Lannom
plannom@thehinsdalean.com

Village officials are discussing a two-pronged approach to help encourage historic preservation in town.

One of the strategies is to offer incentives to those who are interested in preserving a historic home. The Hinsdale Village Board and Hinsdale Historic Preservation Commission met together Tuesday to discuss a proposal to offer zoning relief in such cases.

"The goal is to create a separate, streamlined, user-friendly section in the zoning code with easily applied bulk regulations for historic properties," village planner Bethany Salmon wrote in a memo to trustees and commissioners.

The proposed changes would use building elevation to control height, allow for slightly reduced rear and side yard setbacks, waive floor area ratio requirements and increase lot coverage allowance from 50 to 60 percent.

Village staff reviewed four sample homes in the Robbins Park subdivision, which is on the National Register of Historic Places, and explained what the proposed changes would mean on each lot. In most cases, the new rules would allow an addition to extend a little closer to the side and/or rear lot lines.

One of the four homes, at 420 S. Park Ave., would significantly benefit from the proposed relief, Salmon said. The changes would provide an extra 7 feet on the interior side of the irregularly shaped lot and 10 1/2 feet to the rear.

"That allows quite a bit more room just to allow for something like a small little addition to the south of the building or even a garage," she said. "This is probably a case where it could make a huge difference."

Nonconforming lots that no longer meet current code requirements would be more favorably situated, Salmon said.

The proposed relief could be offered to homes located in a historic overlay district and at scattered sites throughout the village. The overlay would eliminate the need for individuals to obtain landmark status for their home in order to qualify for the relief.

"Getting people to landmark their home is extremely challenging," Salmon said.

Village officials still need to determine what the review and approval process would look like and how long it would last. Officials expressed interest in moving from a public hearing before the Hinsdale Zoning Board of Appeals to a public meeting before another group, possibly the historic preservation commission.

Preservation Commissioner Alexis Braden said the village needs a quick application process for those who would like to be added to a list of historic homes that qualify.

One way to do that would be through a zoning map amendment, but that would be cumbersome, Salmon said. "One would hope there would be an easier way," she added.

Robb McGinnis, director of community development, said a message he heard loud and clear from a phone call with builders in town is that having a historic home needs to be very desirable.

"We want to create an environment where we have a list of exceptional homes, a list people are clamoring to get on rather than get off," he said.

Braden said that while incentives are great, she would like more discussion of the work the commission did to revise Title 14 to regulate behavior, such as neglect, that could lead to teardowns.

Title 14 revisions will be discussed next, McGinnis said, noting Village President Tom Cauley wanted to work on incentives first — the carrot before the stick.

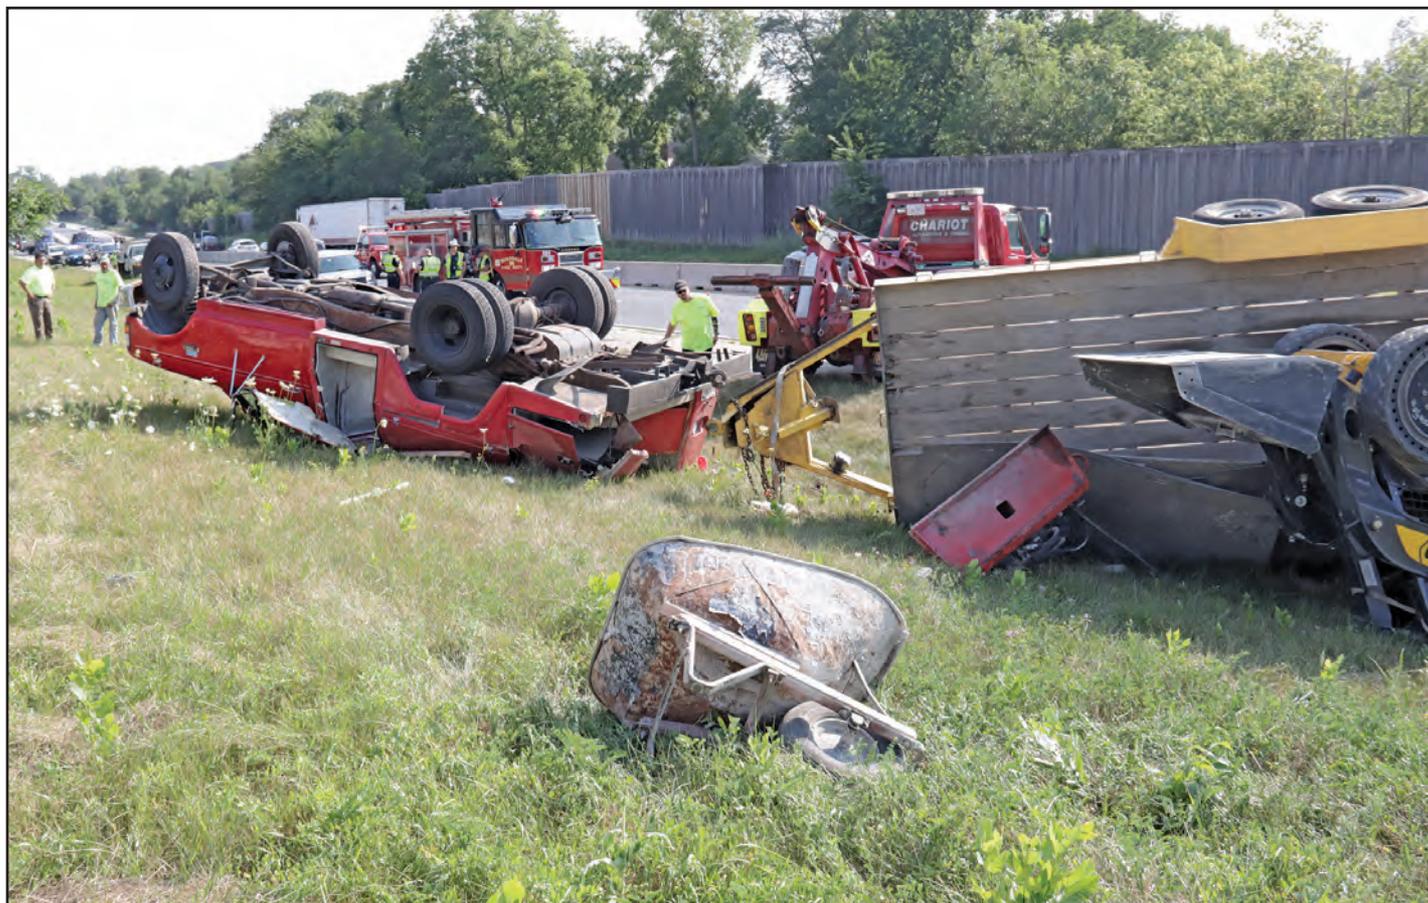

"They will dovetail in," McGinnis said. "I think at the end of the day, we're hoping to accomplish the same thing but we're on two different tracks."

Any of the zoning changes would have to go through the formal text amendment process, which would include notification to homeowners and neighbors, a public hearing before the plan commission and formal adoption by the village board.

Commissioners and trustees agreed to have staff begin working with a lawyer to draft the legal language required for a text amendment.

The groups have been meeting together since May and plan to do so again next month, before the village board meetings on Sept. 7 and 21. At the first of those meetings, which begin at 6:30 p.m., the group plans to look at other incentives to encourage historic preservation.

New shops ready to welcome patrons

First of two-part story on merchants that have moved in features three recent arrivals

By Ken Knutson

kknutson@thehinsdalean.com

Rino Burdi said 24 W. Hinsdale Ave. is the perfect fit for Burdi Clothing shop.

"It's like my man cave," he said with a smile.

Burdi started in the menswear business with his father at the flagship shop in Chicago. He said the Hinsdale space, which opened last September, is three times the size of the downtown store but has just half the merchandise.

"This is just meant to be a little more relaxed and easy. Not in your face," Burdi remarked.

Open is the feeling of the store, occupying a 100-year-old building that once housed a Chevy dealership and most recently Hartley's Bike Shoppe.

A Ferrari in the center of the store and e-bikes on display pay homage that legacy. Shoes, jackets and shirts share the floor with luggage and accessories.

"I wanted to do more of a lifestyle brand. We sell a lot more than just clothing," said Burdi. "We still do very high-end, very tailored (clothing)."

A Burr Ridge resident, Burdi had built a strong clientele in this area.

"I always knew that I wanted to have something out here," he said,

The building required significant repairs and remodeling. The resulting aesthetic of exposed steel, wooden trusses and glass was worth the effort, Burdi said.

He points out the exquisite stitching on the suit jackets as his longtime tailor performs his craftsmanship in the back.

"This is all done by hand," Burdi said. "You can see the tailoring for yourself. It's beautiful. It's an art. And it's a dying art."

True to the Burdi Clothing's heritage, Italy is the source for the luxury offerings.

"It's all curated by me, and I try to bring things that my clients would like that they've never seen anywhere, that they can't get anywhere," Burdi said.

And it's resonating beyond his expectations.

■ GOOD REASONS

This is the latest in an ongoing series of articles about Hinsdale's business community and good reasons to shop here

"Who would have known that we're doing better here now than we are downtown?"

Fans find their Favorite

Robert Hughes' women's boutique, Favorite, at 50 S. Washington St., is apparently leaving some of his customers conflicted.

"One lady said she wanted to tell everyone about my store, but then said, 'There's a part of me that wants to keep you all to myself,'" Hughes related with a chuckle.

Favorite opened last September, the latest Hinsdale venture for the designer who introduced his style to the village with Robert Hughes Interiors in 2013. He sees the shop as a natural complement to that endeavor.

"My goal for a long time as part of my business model was to open up a retail store, too," said Hughes, whose previous employers include names like Saks Fifth Avenue and Neiman Marcus. "So I have a retail background and a fashion background on top of my interior design."

He said the boutique's name reflects the regard he has for the clothing, home goods and gift items he brings together for patrons to peruse and purchase.

"What we do is to try to have it very curated," Hughes said. "When I buy for the store, I really try to just pick things that I fall in love with."

The space—formerly occupied by Merle Norman—is small. But he said customers enjoy that cozy, European-esque charm of the space. And the location is making itself known.

"We've had a nice response from the community," he said. "We see a lot of repeat customers. We see clients that love the store that bring their friends in that are visiting."

Rino Burdi's Burdi Clothing on downtown Hinsdale's west side is one of several new village businesses that have opened up in the last year as the local economy bounces back from the impact of the pandemic. (Jim Slonoff photo)

Many even come from out of state.

"I hear back things like they love what they bought or they get so many compliments on it," he said. "You're building relationships and friendships with people in the community."

He said a diversity of stores and styles makes for a vibrant business district.

"I don't want to be another store, I just want to be my store," he said.

Gallery's artful arrival

"I wanted this to feel more like an urban gallery," said Catherine Ponakala, walking through her Virgil Catherine Gallery.

Hinsdale's newest venue for fine art was years in the conceptual phase, the Hinsdale resident and longtime art collector said, finally coming to fruition June 1 at 45 S. Washington St. when former tenant Lepa Boutique moved across the street.

"I thought, 'It's perfect,'"

Ponakala related. "When I go into a space, I like the space, the light, the brightness."

Many have in town have no doubt already spied the translucent neon green gnome, by sculptor Sam Tufnell, beckoning to passersby from the front window. Inside are pieces that use reclaimed shopping carts and wood, and works by both established artists, such as New York-based Guy Stanley Philoche, and up-and-comers.

"We represent modern contemporary art as well as emerging artists," she said, pointing out pieces by former Hinsdalean Madeline Hines, who grew up as Ponakala's neighbor. "She lives and works in New York City. (Actor) Liev Schreiber bought one of her pieces and talked about it in 'Architectural Digest.'"

In the back is the "middle gallery" with shows that rotate about every six weeks to give local residents an art experience option that doesn't require a Chicago commute.

"We're trying to do events — what's called the artist's reception — so that people can come in, meet the artist, mingle, meet each other," Ponakala said. "People are seeking new experiences closer to home."

She relishes collaborating with other merchants in town. Her upcoming show "The Intersection of Art and Fashion" includes an artist's reception with runway models wearing clothes from local stores to mark pre-fashion week in New York City.

And she hopes for more such opportunities.

"How can we work together as small businesses in town to promote one another?" she said.

Ponakala is eager to expose more people to emerging art and see it as an investment as much as a design choice.

"For people to take a risk, you don't have to have a framed Picasso," Ponakala said.

COVID-19 cases rising

Twenty-three new Hinsdale residents have tested positive for COVID-19 over the past week.

The DuPage County Health Department reported 22 new cases, and the Cook County Health Department reported one new case.

That brings the total number of reported cases in the village to 1,869, compared to 1,846 last week.

Amita Hinsdale Hospital had one confirmed COVID-19 patient and one patient awaiting test results as of Wednesday, a spokesman said.

The rolling seven-day positivity rate for Region 8, which includes DuPage County, was 5.3 percent on Saturday, compared to 4.6 percent a week prior.

Illinois has administered almost 13.4 million doses of vaccines. An average of 24,695 doses are being administered daily, compared to about 28,250 last week.

Almost 61 percent of DuPage County residents are fully vaccinated.

MEETING ROUNDUP

Hinsdale Village Board

Among other business Tuesday night, trustees:

- approved a new water rate structure that includes a $15 infrastructure maintenance and improvement fee on each bill (issued every two months) to fund water and sewer infrastructure projects. A typical household of four is expected to see an increase of $1.58 a month. The new rates are expected to bring in an additional $750,000 a year.

- agreed to issue almost $3.1 million in general obligation bonds to refinance bonds issued in 2012 to take advantage of a .93 interest rate. The refinancing will save the village about $180,000 over the 10-year life of the loan. The village expects to repay the bonds with sales tax revenue. Village President Tom Cauley noted the village was able to get a good rate because it has a AAA bond rating from Standard & Poor, a rating less than 10 percent of Illinois municipalities have achieved.

- decided to pursue almost $2.4 million available in federal American Rescue Plan Act grant funds from the state. The village expects to receive $1.2 million in September and another $1.2 million a year after that.

- agreed to spend $38,400 for design enhancements for the approach to the planned pedestrian bridge over the Tri-State Tollway along 47th Street so it will resemble the Oak Street bridge

Company taps into adults' unique skills

Dad helps son, others with autism find rewarding work, confidence that comes with it

By Sandy Illian Bosch
news@thehinsdalean.com

For many parents, a child's impending high school graduation is filled with anticipation of what is to come. But as Matt Friedman approached the end of his years at Hinsdale Central High School, his parents worried about what the future had in store.

Diagnosed with autism, Matt lacked the social skills and executive functioning needed for a traditional college experience, said his dad, Hinsdale resident David Friedman. But he knew his son had skills that would be valuable in the workplace.

"Matt is good with patterns and numbers," Friedman said.

Rather than wait and worry that his son would fall among the 80 percent of people with autism who are unemployed, Friedman used his resources and business background to create a workplace not only for his son, but for other young adults facing similar situations.

Downers Grove-based Autonomy Works employs dozens of adults with autism whose unique abilities serve the company's clients. Autonomy Works currently contracts with 12 companies across the country.

Services include data analysis and organization, transaction processing and website development. Specializing in websites for school districts, the Autonomy Works team currently is working on four school athletic sites.

Friedman said the idea for Autonomy Works occurred to him while working in marketing for a major retailer that used newspaper inserts to reach customers. A single, simple mistake in one of those inserts could cost a company millions of dollars, Friedman said. Ads must be carefully examined to avoid costly mistakes.

"I realized this was stuff that Matt could do," he said.

Tasks that many people would find tedious never get boring for employees of Autonomy Works, Friedman said.

"They like the repetition," he said, which probably has much to do with the company's high employee retention rate.

Friedman said that while many new college grads want to experience different things as they search for the job that makes them happy, his employees prefer to master a small number of tasks.

The pandemic and its resulting need for people to work from home threatened to be challenging for Autonomy Works and its employees.

"Change is not the favorite thing of people with autism," Friedman said.

As employees moved their workspaces to their homes, Autonomy Works leaders did all they could to make the transition smooth, moving desks and office equipment to employees' houses. With a couple of exceptions, Friedman said, everyone adapted to their new work environment.

As for his own son, Matt is celebrating six years with the company his father created, and reaping benefits that go far beyond a paycheck.

"It's been really remarkable," Friedman said of the change he's seen in his son.

Matt is taking classes at the College of DuPage, has mastered the public transportation system and even talks about one day moving out on his own.

"It's really shifted his focus from looking backward to looking forward to where he's going in life," Friedman said. "He has a lot more confidence now."

Matt's is just one success story to come out of Autonomy Works. Friedman said employees with autism have bought their own cars, gone back to school and started and sustained relationships, all as a result of the confidence that comes from finding success at a job they enjoy.

"We just wish we could do more," said Friedman, who recently shared the story of Autonomy Works on the CBS news program, 60 Minutes. With 500,000 people with autism set to enter the workforce in the next 10 years, Friedman said he's eager to share what he can to see similar companies start up in other parts of the country.

60 SECONDS

Longtime resident has seen town grow up

The north end of Hinsdale felt more rural than suburban when Virginia Feller and her husband, Bernie, moved there in the 1950s.

"This was like a country town then," said the 102-year-old Feller. "The Salt Creek Club was a meadow."

The village could boast at having three grocery stores, three drug stores, a bank "and reasonably priced clothing stores with nice merchandise," she noted.

Just as today, one just had to make sure not to exceed the downtown parking limit.

"They had a policeman they called 'Shadow.' He went around and marked tires, then he went around again and give tickets," Feller recounted.

The Hinsdale Fire Station was on First Street then, next to the popular Hinsdale Theater. In addition to film screenings, the venue hosted live summer stage performances by some of the era's leading acts, like Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca.

"I shook hands with Imogene Coca," she said, laughing at the memory.

Feller lives in the home her husband built enchantingly close to Fullersburg Woods.

"I used to walk there all the time," said Feller, who still gets around just fine.

Sometimes the forest's inhabitants visit her.

"Two times a mother deer had her (baby) right in my backyard," Feller shared.

She learned that fawns are left on their own during the day while their mothers go off to feed. Seeing the young deer alone during a rainstorm, Feller's own maternal instinct kicked in.

"The poor little thing's going to get all wet," she thought before realizing that getting wet is part of life outdoors.

"I'm trying to think what I have to cover it up," smiled Feller, an engaging storyteller.

She worked at her husband's real estate office in Oak Park doing accounting and filing until 2019.

"I went to three days, then I went to two days, then I had to go one day, and now here I am," Feller said.

Her organizational skills remain impeccable, and she insists on doing her own banking and running errands with helper Vida.

"I like to do my own book work. I balance my checkbook and pay all my bills," she said. "My travels consist of the bank, the drugstore, the doctors, the grocery store and occasionally the bookstore."

An unwavering Chicago Blackhawks fan, Feller was treated to box seats at a game in celebration of her becoming a centenarian.

"And, of course, the Hawks lost," she said with a chuckle.

Cooking, on the other hand, was never among her favorite activities.

"I don't like to cook, never did," she remarked. "When I did cook, I never tasted it."

For a treat she prefers dark chocolate or raw nuts — but always in moderation.

Feller will turn 103 in October. Her wish would be to do something she had to give up at age 97: driving.

"I miss being able to drive my car and do what I want," she said.

All the lessons point to getting students vaxxed

The start of school is around the corner. Unfortunately, it will again begin under the cloud of COVID-19.

Thankfully this year, unlike in 2020, a majority of the population has been vaccinated, a crucial step in limiting the spread and preventing serious and potential deadly cases.

The newly inoculated include many middle school and high school students age 12 and older for whom the Pfizer vaccine was approved. According to Illinois Department of Public Health statistics Wednesday, DuPage County leads the state with almost 65 percent of residents ages 12-17 having received at least one shot of the double-shot vaccine.

That's good news, but there's more work to do. To maintain a fully in-person instructional year while also protecting people's health, we urge all those eligible and medically able to get vaccinated.

In response to the COVID's highly contagious delta variant, the Centers for Disease Control has updated its guidance to advise universal indoor masking for all teachers, staff, students and visitors to K-12 schools, regardless of vaccination status. Full-time in-person learning in the fall is still strongly recommended, but with masking and other now familiar prevention strategies in place.

Last week Gov. Pritzker followed that guidance in issuing a statewide mask mandate for public and private schools in Illinois. While some may chafe under the order, we are relieved that school boards will not be put in the position (again) of navigating the clashing and emotional positions of residents on the matter.

But that layer of protection, while especially important for elementary schools, does not obviate the need for middle and high schoolers to avail themselves of the vaccine.

As the CDC has stated, vaccination is the leading public health prevention strategy to end the COVID-19 pandemic. Evidence suggests that people who are fully vaccinated against COVID-19 are less likely to become infected and develop symptoms and are at substantially reduced risk from severe illness and death from COVID-19 compared with unvaccinated people.

"Only a small proportion of fully vaccinated people get infected (breakthrough infections), even with the delta variant," reads the CDC guidance on its website, while noting that fully vaccinated people who are infected with the delta variant can be infectious and can spread the virus to others. "To reduce the risk of becoming infected with the delta variant and spreading it to others, students, teachers and school staff should continue to use layered prevention strategies including universal masking in schools."

The American Academy of Pediatrics echoes that recommendation.

"Students benefit from in-person learning, and safely returning to in-person instruction in the fall 2021 is a priority," the AAP states on its website. "Vaccination is the leading public health prevention strategy to end the COVID-19 pandemic. Promoting vaccination can help schools safely return to in-person learning as well as extracurricular activities and sports."

Lets trust the science and the experts to protect our students, our school communities and our families and to support in-person learning.

COMMENTARY

New wave of mask debate as schools set to reopen

I walked into a meeting last week, grabbed a chair and settled in.

At some point, I noticed I couldn't quite recognize the person sitting next to me because she was wearing a mask. I looked around and came to the realization that everyone was wearing a mask. I was the only maskhole! Fortunately, I had one in my purse and quickly put it on.

I was more prepared when I went to get my haircut a couple of days later. There, it turned out, masks were not in wide use.

These moments of confusion might soon be a thing of the past, if masks once again become the norm for everyone everywhere. Gov. JB Pritzker last week announced a new mask mandate for all schools, public and private, preschool through high school, and for long-term care facilities.

The Centers for Disease Control says we, too, should be wearing masks indoors if live in an area of "substantial" or "high" COVID-19 transmission. We do.

And so the debate continues. Less than a day after Pritzker's press conference, Hinsdale's representative in the Illinois House, Republican Deanne Mazzochi, issued a statement opposing the mandate. Her criticism is pointed. She says the governor is not following science and trying to exercise "unilateral executive powers" refused to him by the legislature.

But the argument isn't just among the politicians. Hinsdale has a set of dueling petitions, one supporting a mask requirement in schools and the other advocating for optional masks.

I for one am relieved kids will be wearing masks in school. After switching off more than once between hybrid and remote school last fall, we decided to have Ainsley go fully remote for the rest of the year. I was not looking forward to the possibility of quarantines interrupting her in-person learning this year.

Like most people, I'd prefer not to wear a mask. But with cases on the rise, the opposition just doesn't make sense to me. I can't understand why some see wearing a mask as an abdication of personal freedom or complain that they don't want "government" telling them what to do.

The government tells us what to do all the time. Driving is a prime example. We must obtain a license and purchase car insurance. We must wear a seatbelt, travel at prescribed speeds and drive on the right side of the road.

I keep thinking about Ainsley's friend from preschool, who caught pneumonia a couple of years ago and still has not fully recovered. His mom was terribly worried when she enrolled him for a two-week daytime camp this summer, even though much of it took place outside and all the kids were required to wear masks.

What will she do this fall if parents are able to "opt out" of the mask mandate at her son's school? Is she supposed to home school him for an additional year because another parent wants to send his or her child to school without a mask?

I, too, think we should listen to "the science." But over the past 17 months I think we've seen that scientists simply don't know everything there is to know about this virus. So erring on the side of caution doesn't seem unreasonable to me.

I wish we could all stop framing this in terms of our own desires and beliefs and really consider how our decisions — our supposedly "personal" choices — affect others.

Maybe then we could all stop arguing.

GUEST COMMENTARY

In a mood? You're not alone

I'm in a mood — and not a good one.

I read the papers, look on the internet, get in my car, watch TV, and it seems almost everywhere I go, people are in a mood too. The world is supposedly ending (due to disease or global warming, take your pick), people have decided they no longer need to be civil to one another, much less help each other, and the people we've elected to government offices have largely made everything divisive, attempting to sway people to "their side."

My mood reminds me of a movie called "Network." The main character was a TV personality, and his tag line was, "I'm mad as hell, and I'm not gonna take this anymore!" To that, I say, "Amen, brother!"

If I'm honest with myself, I don't like being in a mood, and I don't like being around people who are in a mood. I don't like people on the internet who are in a mood, and I don't like a culture that always seems to be in a collective mood of judgment, anger, self-righteousness and hatred disguised as concern.

Yet the more I focus on not being in a mood, the worse my mood becomes. The more I seek solace in things or social media or other diversions from life, the more unpleasant I become. Now, if you know me, you might not say I'm unpleasant (generally), but I'm a reasonably good actor, you see. I think most people are reasonably good actors, but many have decided to end their acting careers lately, and are instead just

While everyone has their moments, and I'm no exception, you can't change the world by focusing on yourself and what is wrong in the world. This is nothing new, but it's true. The only way to make things better is to first be thankful for what you have and then to try and help others with what you have. And I'm not talking about money. Money can help, but it's never the same as lending an ear to listen and show compassion or offering encouragement to help someone through something new and scary or being a companion to someone who is hurting.

When I was a kid, we knew our neighbors and helped them out. They did the same for us. This wasn't an act of indirect selfishness, but a recognition of what was the right thing to do. These days, people stay to themselves, other than a few friends, and many don't even greet strangers in the street. Is this the kind of world in which you want to raise your children? Not me.

So, I'm going to try to start each day with thankfulness, and help those who need help. I may not always succeed, but since it seems moods are contagious, I plan to try to make mine a positive one for a change. Hopefully, you will as well.

The world needs that right now. It needs you to be that positive change, too.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Writer shares columnist's concern over teardowns

No question, Hinsdale is demolishing the stories that reside in its old homes.

The village is in the throes of a building boom. Lots of stone and brick delivered to job sights. Loads of slate roofing and copper downspouts, too. Weird little dormers sticking out of slate roofs. Massive ground to roofline windows reflecting multi-story staircases. Some of the homes that are being built seem to possess a design that, in my opinion, is cookie-cutter and lacks a certain aesthetic beauty. It seems doubtful that in 100 years, these homes will have much of a story to tell.

Of course, we are free to purchase residential property and tear down the old to make way for the new. But following the leader of the last new home built is daunting.

I need to eat crow. I was an outspoken advocate for tearing down the old 'relics' and building new. I've done a 180 recently when my favorite historic Georgian was demolished. It is sorely missed. I'm concerned how quickly the heritage of our quaint village is disappearing.

I realize this disappearing act has been an ongoing dialogue for over 30 years.

I'd like the village and Counties of DuPage and Cook to pass tax credit incentives regarding residential properties that have historic value and are vulnerable to teardown. Homebuyers interested in preserving Hinsdale's history should be rewarded. It's time to do something. We have to stop losing all of our stories. — Renee Mumford, Hinsdale

County issues notice of mosquitoes testing positive for West Nile virus

Reports of increased mosquito pools testing positive for the presence of West Nile virus this month has prompted the DuPage County Health Department to encourage residents to protect themselves from mosquito bites and the risk of contracting the virus.

The health department operates a countywide West Nile virus surveillance program, and recent positive reports from mosquitoes trapped in the county are in line with similar reports of virus activity elsewhere in northeastern Illinois.

Residents are encouraged to check the Personal Protection Index at <https://www.dupagehealth.org/243/Personal-Protection-Index>. The PPI provides residents with a current snapshot of West Nile Virus activity, with risk levels ranging from zero to three, with zero being no activity and three announcing multiple human cases of the virus in DuPage County. The current risk level is one, with "Localized abundance of active mosquitoes, climate conditions favorable for development of virus." The PPI is updated every Wednesday and will change to match the risk level determined for that period.

The weather forecast for the next week includes warmer temperatures, which increases the potential for the increased presence of west Nile virus.

The best way to prevent the virus is to avoid mosquito bites and follow the four Ds of defense:

- Drain: Drain those items that collect standing water around your home, yard or business. Scrub and refill pet water dishes and bird baths regularly.

- Defend: Use an insect repellent containing DEET when outdoors and reapply according to directions.

- Dress: Wear long pants, long sleeves and closed-toe shoes when outside to cover the skin.

- Dusk and dawn: Wear repellent outdoors during these prime times for mosquito activity.

Find more prevention tips on the DuPage County Health Department's "Fight the Bite" page at <https://www.dupagehealth.org/ftb>.

Approximately one in five people who are infected with west Nile virus will develop symptoms such as fever, headache, body aches, joint pains, vomiting, diarrhea or rash. Less than 1 percent will develop a serious neurological illness such as encephalitis or meningitis (inflammation of the brain or surrounding tissues).

West Nile virus activity generally decreases in the fall when cooler temperatures arrive and especially after the first frost of the season. More information on the virus activity in Illinois is available at <http://dph.illinois.gov/topics-services/diseases-and-conditions/west-nile-virus/surveillance>.

What's in a name?

The Hinsdalean

One town. One paper.

OUR NAME SAYS IT ALL...

IT TAKES A VILLAGE

BETHANY SALMON, VILLAGE PLANNER

As Hinsdale's village planner, Bethany Salmon is helping the village prepare for the future while keeping one eye solidly focused on the past.

Salmon's job is to protect the buildings that make Hinsdale special while exploring opportunities for expansion and improvement. Developers and business owners with hopes of bringing projects to the village must first pass their ideas past Salmon.

"We're not interested in growth for the sake of growth," said Salmon, who was drawn to the village by its history.

"I was looking for a place that had a really wonderful, historic downtown," said the Oak Park native, who noted she sees similarities between the town where she grew up and the town where she now works.

Salmon was working as planning division manager for the village of Orland Park when she heard of Hinsdale's search for a new village planner. She said the chance to work in a village with historic buildings and the capacity to grow was too good to pass up.

A lifelong love of travel likely led to her career choice, Salmon said.

As a child, she traveled to many different parts of the world, always noting the differences from one place to the next. But Salmon said she wasn't satisfied with just seeing what made each place unique; she wanted to know the reasons behind those differences.

It wasn't until she was a student at University of Illinois at Chicago that Salmon realized there were classes that would help her answer those questions and a career path that would put her knowledge and interests to work. She went on to earn undergraduate and master's degrees in urban planning.

Before embarking on her career, Salmon spent a year as a member of the AmeriCorps VISTA program, helping with the historical preservation and revitalization of the Great Falls, Montana, downtown.

She also worked with the city of Chicago's historic preservation division and helped with the growth and development of Oswego before making her way to Hinsdale, where she serves as liaison to the historic preservation and plan commissions.

Since joining the Hinsdale staff in March, Salmon has started a review of the village's historic preservation regulations and possible incentives that could help to protect Hinsdale's oldest buildings.

"We're still in the preliminary stage," she said, adding the commission has met several times with village officials as a committee of the whole.

Salmon said her ultimate goal as village planner is to preserve and build upon the parts of Hinsdale that make it unique.

It was Hinsdale's old buildings that first drew Salmon to the village, but in her first months on the job she has found many other things to like about Hinsdale and the people who live and work there.

"I'm in awe sometimes of how passionate people are here," Salmon said. She said Hinsdale is a place where residents truly care about their town and the village staff and officials truly care about the people who call Hinsdale home.

"That's not something we see in every community," Salmon said. "It's been really refreshing to see that."

BAND DIRECTOR WINS AWARD

Community Consolidated Elementary District 181's Eric Morong was recently selected to receive the 2021 Quinlan & Fabish Chicagoland Music Educators Award.

Morong was recognized at a June 17 celebration at the Quinlan & Fabish Burr Ridge location. He teaches band at Prospect School and Clarendon Hills Middle School and is entering his fourth year teaching in the district.

"This is quite an amazing feat," CHMS Principal Levi Brown said. "We are both proud and excited for Eric with this wonderful accomplishment."

District 181 Superintendent Hector Garcia said Morong has done an outstanding job working with students and collaborating with stakeholders.

"Due to his immense talent, he has been able to contribute to an already remarkable music program at D181," Garcia said. "I'm glad that his peers have formally recognized his talents as a music teacher and I'm thrilled that more of the D181 community will hear about his terrific work as an educator.

Since 1989, the Chicagoland Outstanding Music Educator Awards have been presented to individuals who excel in the profession. Each year, teachers nominate colleagues, mentors and friends for this honor. The nominations are then selected by a panel of previous winners.

"These cadet-leaders have been challenged, tested and assessed throughout their time at the academy and have consistently prevailed, demonstrating excellence across all four pillars," said Brig. Gen. Mark Quander, commandant of cadets. "They are leaders of character who have planned, coordinated and led a rigorous and effective summer training cycle for the Corps of Cadets. It is abundantly clear that these leaders embody the values of duty, honor and country and have committed themselves to serving a higher cause.

Fest focuses on the mind-body connection

Wellness House event teaches those on cancer journey more about self-care, relaxation

By Pamela Lannom

plannom@thehinsdalean.com

The upcoming Mind-Body Fest at Wellness House couldn't come at a better time.

"Certainly the past year and a half has been unprecedented, you could say, in terms of anxiety and isolation and for those who are dealing with cancer, even more so," said Lisa Kolavennu, executive director of Wellness House in Hinsdale. "Yet engaging in these simple acts of self-care really has an alleviating effect for some of those negative experiences of isolation."

The event kicks off Saturday, Aug. 28, with a series of 90-minute sessions designed for in-person small group gatherings. Most of the rest of the week's programming (see sidebar) will be offered online. Kolavennu credited organizers with creating a hybrid event that can meet the needs of many.

"They think so creatively about how to bring people together to get that experience of being in person, yet do it safely, and have so many options for those who can't be in person," she said.

The week offers a comprehensive overview of programs so people can see which ones they like best.

"What's neat about this event is people get to sample lots of different types of stress relief and coping tools," Kolavennu said. "They can find the ones that feel most useful to them, the ones most aligned with them as individuals, and put them in their tool boxes."

One of the sessions on Vedic yoga will introduce participants to the practice and its benefits, instructor Saumen Chattopadhyay said.

"A lot of people get confused about yoga and meditation and relaxation and things like that," he said. "In the end, yoga is connecting to your inner self. You find a door to yourself and start the journey going inward."

His session will be a condensed version of a course normally taught in installments, starting with an introduction, followed by a focus on breath work, stress management and emotion management.

"The object here is to get people excited about it and starting the quest," he said.

Some of the Wellness House participants he has worked with initially were not aware their cells could change based on their intentions, said Chattopadhyay, who has been interested in yoga for more than 30 years.

"Yoga actually teaches you that your destiny is not defined," he said. "You can change everything based on your intentions, based on your practice. There is a better future if you try."

Chattopadhyay said he's gratified by students who write testimonials about their experience and sign up to repeat courses.

"That shows me that they still have belief and they are practicing," he said. "They are looking for more."

He emphasized that yoga is not a belief system but a scientifically proven practice that works for everyone who learns how to do it.

"You do not have to be a Hindu or a Buddhist or a Jain," he said. "It really does not matter what your religion is. All that matters is you understand science and the laws of the universe."

Fellow presenter Mary Lisa "ML" Wahlfeldt, a certified breath coach, also pointed to the science that supports the benefit of proper breathing.

"I'm not making this up because I think it's a great idea you should focus on your breath," she said. "Studies have shown when you practice your breathing, you really do have the ability to relax on demand."

Wahlfeldt explained that the vast majority of people, instead of breathing horizontally using their diaphragm, create what's called a "vertical breath,".

"If you watch a cat or a dog or a baby or a toddler, when you watch them sleep, there is a rise and a fall around the belly area," she said.

When people inhale properly, they are able to fill the largest part of their lungs with oxygen. When they don't, the lack of oxygen triggers the nervous system to go into sympathetic or "fight or flight" mode.

"Fight or flight was a great thing," she said. "It's a great thing for us when we're in a trauma situation. Our bodies were never meant to be in fight or flight for days and weeks and months and years."

The additional cortisol, adrenaline, histamine and other stress hormones the body produces in that mode decrease the minute people begin belly breathing.

"You are in control of putting yourself in a parasympathetic nervous mode," she said. "You'll start to feel calm and focused."

Among the benefits are a drop in blood pressure, a boost to the immune system, improved arterial blood flow and better sleep and digestion. The parasympathetic mode also helps mitigate asthma, allergies and acid reflux.

Belly breathing is especially helpful for those on the cancer journey who need to calm themselves during treatment — and for the family members who support them, Wahlfeldt said.

"Clients reach out after class — 'Boy, this breathing really helps me get through my chemo treatment or my radiation treatment,'" she said.

And the benefits will be long-lasting, she noted.

"There will be a moment in your life days or weeks or years down the road, and you'll find yourself stressed or anxious or upset and not able to breathe," but your mind will recall how to belly breathe, she said.

The entire slate of programs will help participants now and in the future, Kolavennu said.

"People get to experience the immediate feel-good effects of engaging in self-care and stress relief," she said. "It also has long-term effects. So tools like deep-breathing or mindfulness, not only are they useful in an acute situation ... but they also are healthy and useful over time."

Ex-Devils look to heat up in NCAA

Brooke Cooper
Cornell University, volleyball

I'm looking forward to: being a part of such an amazing program full of talented coaches and players.

I'll remember: the friendships I have created, some of whom will be my friends forever, Coach Tracey instilling in me to never settle and always strive to be better, and Coach (Lisa Tazelaar) and Kelly (Watson) teaching me discipline and sportsmanship that I will remember and use in all aspects of my life.

Emma Elliott
University of Tennessee at Martin, soccer

I am looking forward to: making new connections with my new teammates and working to accomplish more at a higher level.

I'll remember: the team camaraderie and the willingness to succeed both on and off the field. We always wanted to put in the work for each other.

Ryan Koschik
FC Malaga City Academy (Spain), soccer

I'm looking forward to: developing my game with high-level competition by playing against some of the top clubs in Spain, like Getafe, Atletico Madrid, Granada CF and FC Barcelona.

I'll remember: playing against Morton my junior year. I played a great game and I ended up making one of the biggest saves of my life that got the crowd and my team really pumped up.

Nolan Lahmann
Emory University, swimming

I'm looking forward to: spending a winter without any snow and being a part of a powerhouse swim team.

I'll remember: the Hinsdale Central swim and dive team camaraderie and the way the team bonds together in and out of the pool. It is something I will cherish forever.

J.P. McClear
Rollins College, rowing

I'm looking forward to: working with my new coach, making new friends and for the atmosphere and excitement that the school is going to bring me.

I'll remember: the spirit of encouragement and wishing each other good luck and being with my good friends.

Ryan Orput
Miami University of Ohio, football

I'm looking forward to: creating that family-like bond that we had back at Central.

I'll remember: that our team was more than just full of teammates and friends. It really was a second family.

Taylor University, cheerleading

I'm looking forward to: being able to continue to grow in my relationship with Jesus and being able to help others grow in their faith. I am so thankful that I will be a part of the team.

Charlie Sessa
Columbia University, football
